

This fact sheet summarizes some key findings from a 2022 report by the Conference Board of Canada on behalf of Tourism HR Canada, examining the labour market trends in the tourism sector and projecting labour demand into 2024 and 2025. These projections are based primarily on job demand but also incorporate some consideration of supply-side labour issues in the form of job vacancies. For a more detailed discussion of the findings of this report, the methodologies and assumptions that underlie the analysis, and the complete sets of figures and projections across the sector as a whole, please see the full report, which is accessible via TourismHR.ca.

Number of Jobs Per Year (Actual and Projected)

Employment in food and beverage services fell by more than 21% in 2020, with a modest rebound in 2021.

Numbers had almost recovered to pre-pandemic levels by 2022, and employment is projected to surpass 2019 levels as of 2023, and continue to grow into 2025.

National Employment History and Projections

Some occupations within food and beverage services were more heavily impacted by COVID-19 restrictions than others. Employment for front-of-house staff (bartenders, food and beverage servers, and hosts/hostesses) fell sharply in 2020, and is not projected to return to 2019 levels until 2025 or later. Chefs and cooks saw less dramatic declines, and are expected to return to pre-pandemic levels by 2023, as are managers and supervisors. This may partly reflect an increase in take-out service seen during the pandemic, which some analysts forecast is likely to remain popular as the economy continues to open up. As well, many managers and supervisors have taken on additional roles in their businesses to address staff shortages.

Job Vacancies and Projections

As tourism businesses began to restaff in the summer of 2021, labour supply challenges were readily apparent, and job vacancies grew across the food and beverages services industry. Job vacancy rates are projected to be in the double-digits by 2024 for some occupations, most notably food and beverage servers. In contrast, restaurant and food service managers have relatively low projected vacancy rates. These different patterns may reflect the level of experience needed to fulfil some of these positions, where jobs with a typically higher turnover rate also tend to have higher projected vacancy rates.

What's Next for Food and Beverage Services?

Overall, the tourism sector is projected to continue its recovery and regrowth trajectory, although there will be difficult periods as labour force demographics and larger economic forces interact in complex ways.

A report focused on the labour side of the supplydemand issue is expected in 2023, and will provide for a fuller understanding of these complex issues.

In food and beverage services, the key challenges will be retaining existing staff and training them into supervisory positions as needed, and recruiting front-line workers. Cross-training employees to be able to cover more than one position, and building a multi-skilled and dynamic workforce encompassing core employees and casual workers, will likely become a necessary business adjustment.
